WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Fairly benign weather with patchy morning fog today. Daytime highs will be above normal and winds will remain light and terrain-driven. Light precipitation is expected to impact northern California, mainly higher terrain, by late tonight and through Monday. The next possibility for precipitation will be towards the end of the week.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A weak low pressure system will move inland through southern California bringing periods of showers with light to locally moderate rainfall amounts today and decreasing this evening. There will be drying on Monday and for Tuesday through Thursday high pressure aloft near the west coast. A surface high pressure over the great basin will bring lower inland humidities and a warming trend with periods of gusty northeast winds and strongest Wednesday. Onshore flow will return late in the week with slow cooling and increasing humidities.
